Image.Q: Best practice for Windows Azure Application level SSL certificate I'm looking for best practice for implementing SSL certificate based authentication for a web role application which is running on Windows Azure. We would like to use self signed certificate (of type, thumbprint, name). I have implemented certificate binding with self signed certificate by adding the following code on the web.config. But when I check the certificate information using `WebRoleInfo.GetCertificate("ssl:*")` It gives me the certificate of type `x509Certificate2`. Is this the right way to implement SSL authentication? Update: I have also updated my web.config with the following:
